

North Pole Open House on Sulfolane

Tuesday, May 1 • 5:30–7:30 p.m.
in the North Pole Plaza Mall

The Technical Project Team overseeing the investigation and remediation of the sulfolane groundwater plume in North Pole is hosting an open house to answer community questions and provide information on recent project work.

Updates include:

- The National Toxicology Program's announcement of its plan to design and conduct sulfolane toxicity studies.
- The progress on the investigation and remediation of the plume during the last year.
- The 2012 project schedule and cleanup activities that have been set.

TPT members from Flint Hills, and the Alaska departments of Environmental Conservation, and Health and Social Services will be there, as well as representatives from the City of North Pole and Fairbanks North Star Borough. Answers to gardening questions, updated maps, DEC's recent newsletter, posters and handouts will be available.

For more information, call DEC at (907) 451-2182.
